At the Christic Tom Taylor's comedy of Our American Cousts will be performed this evering, with Miss Laura Keene in her original character of "Florence Trenchard." This play had a remarkable success when it was first produced in this country. At the Arch Street Theatre, with John S. Clarke as "Ass Trenchard." It ran for over one hundred nights, and embroiled Messrs. Wheatley & Clarke in a lawsuit with Miss Laura Keene, who claimed the exclusive right to perform it. We are not certain whether the suit has been settled yet, as it had a fashion of making its appearance in the courts just when everybody had thought that it was all arranged to the satisfaction of all parties. This legal squabble was a magnificent advertisement for the play while it was having a run, and until the days of The Black Crook and Humpty Dumpty it was famous for having been performed consecutively for a greater number of nights than any piece ever brought out in this country. The comedy, however, has merits of its own which have given it a permanent position on the stage, and when well acted it is a very entertaining performance. Besides Miss Keene, the cast this evening will include Messrs. Bowers, Sheridan, Jack, Otis, Wallace, MoNulty, Costello, Drew, and Nagle; Mesdames Creese, Carr, Laurens, Anderson, Porter, and Price.

Washington Hall, at the corner of Eighth and Spring Garden streets, has become famous. triumph of its renown sounds far and near. triumph of its renown sounds far and near. Its murky walls and straight-lined windows look upon various and singular spectacles. Upon its benches, at times, sit the advocates of "universal peace"—the members of the Peace Society met in friendly teaparty; its floors yield and lift to the "tripping of the light fantastic toe;" its ceiling echoes the cadence of prayer and hymn; the painted pictures on its walls behold the nomination of Democratic office seekers; and at irregular intervals, to wind up a list the items of which have not all been enumerated, the plugs.

and at irregular intervals, to wind up a list the items of which have not all been enumerated, the plugs, knucks, and rowdies of the town crowd its doorways and strip upon its platform to punimel and be punimeled in a turn or so with the gloves.

There were these latter last night. To them was devoted the Hall from 6 P. M. till midnight. In force, too, were they present, In no contemptible gathering—so far as munibers are concerned, do they allow themselves to participate. And what took them there? Upon the dead walls, fences, and bill-boards around the city, have you not noticed for the few past days a giant poster, announcing that "A Grand Testimonial Benefit to Ned O'Baidwin and Patsy Kenrdon" had been arranged, and furnishing the time and place for the "little mill?" Well, this poster was the herald to the exhibition which came off at Washington Hall last evening. Of course, the brace of beauties whose names were black-lettered upon it were present.

They came to pocket the "dough" kneaded by the benefit. From the east, west, north, and south of the town; from the alteys, bfind courts, and dark lots; from the rat-pits, cock-pits, and "dives;" from every place irreputable and questionable came also their admirers to pat their brawn, and toss hats and tosacco quids in air as they "gave and took" in the "set-to," The hall was absolutely jammed. The tosacco quids in air as they "gave and took" in the "set-to." The hall was absolutely jammed. The "square-heads" wedged themselves into the smallest possible compass, piled upon the benches and window-silis, and blocked the very doorways. Not one in the room but either smoked or chewed.

The floor ran slippery with expectorated nastiness. Not one in the room but "cussed." The very air palpitated with oaths. Not one in the room but taiked. The place was a Bedian—a worse, Like apples in a dung heap, a few—a very few—folks of respectable mien were helumed in here and there. Curiosity, we imagine, and a desire to "see life" had attracted these to the place. An approach, as near as possible, had they endeavored to the "make-up" of roughs, and in some instances bad they admirably succeeded. Of all the crowd each had to pay an entrance fee—fifty cents for admission, a deliar for a reserved seat. They who invested the latter sum were far in the minority. The great mass wouldn't stand such a tax, but nevertheless insisted on pushing towards the front, until the reserved seats were lost among the "common." The Mogul of the exhibition—the Major-domo—was a fellow familiarly called by the audience "Oyster Jack." Upon him devolved the duty of arranging In the chalk, providing sponges, buckets, and gloves, introducing the contestants, getting off little jokes, keeping everybody in a good humor, and in fine everything else. Twas not the first time he had officiated in such a capacity, and he bore his part well. There was considerable delay after the doors had been opened and the ball filled, before anybody in the guise of a "fightist" appeared on the stage. As Oyster Jack announced, this was owing to the reason that the parties named on the placards had not put in an appearance. The room growing impatient, and making botsterous and ungentle calls for "fun," Jack jumped from the stage, and in lieu of others seized a couple of individuals—about the first he reached in the crowd—and pulled them into a small room boxed off from the platform. Thence they shortly issued, stripped to the waist, and after having shaken hands to the names of McGranigan and Bigiey, got to work. For some five minutes they pitched into each other heroically, to the delight of the spectators and the reddening of their own noses. They issued from the fray with faces like beets. They were succeeded by nameless others, and for two hours the performance was unchanged; one continual appearance and disappearance of men in couples, who went through divers passages with the gloves, imagined themselves bone nde puglists, and smiled grimly when they elicited any applause by their play. Everybody had grown tired, and a general murmer growing anger at the non-appearance of the heroes of the time was beginning to make itself heard, when at length O'Baldwin and Reardon stepped upon the boards. The former, the 'Irish Giant,' as he is called, is a mighty man indeed, about six feet nine inches in perpendicular, and broad in proportion. His movements, however, are heavy and slow, and in the judgment of the majority of the critical lookers-on, his boxing was by no means scientific. New Building of the Academy of Natural Sciences.—The dilapidated building of the Academy of Natural Sciences, on Broad street, below Chesnut, it is confidently expected will soon disappear, as the officers of that institution have been for some time actively at work in arranging the architectura details for their new structure. This is a matter of no small labor, as the complex needs of the various scientific departments have been by no means easy to harmonize. The question of the site has not yet been positively determined, as one of the ilberal contributors to the building fund has offered a valu-able lot on Walnut street. The drawings of the new Academy by Mr. J. H. Windrum have been designed for it to front upon the nurchased grant description for it to front upon the purchased ground opposite Logan Square. The County Republican Convention—Addresses by Messrs. Frelinghuysen and Bettle.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Republican County Convention was held at the Court House in Gamden, the Hon. George W. N. Custis presiding. The following ticket was placed in nomination, the nomination for State Senator having been made by accidentation:

In his address before the convention accepting the omination tendered kim, Mr. Bettle said:

Much has been said of late about a certain mysteand dreadful thing that abides among us, under whose baleful influence, like that of the fabled I pas tree, all that is pure and good and true pines and withers away. That mythical horror, that dire chimera, has been called the Ring!

The fences and bare walls of the city have been elegated with oquent with appeals, sometimes flerce, and some mes pitiful, for its destruction and downfall. Wha it is exactly, where located, what deeds of dreadfu import it has done, I know not. Now, Mr. President, if the Ring means a small and despicable number of malcontents, mischief-makers, and disorganizers, who are ready and willing for personal malice, dis-appointed ambition, or reasons yet morevenal and cor-rupt, to use a professed and cheap Republicanism to stab their party, who are its enemies while apparently of its own household, who are ready to strike hands with its foes in a vain and futile attempt to disorganize and defeat it, if that be the Ring, and I know no other, then in the name of all that is loyal and good and true, I say from my inmost soul, down with the Ring. But, sir, if the Ring means good men and true, who have nover wavered never fattered but have nover the second seco Ring, But, sir, if the Ring means good men and true, who have never wavered, never faltered, but have kept brave step shoulder to shoulder, whether in defeat or victory, who are Republicans from principle, who love their party and its glorious creed of law, order, progress, and the largest liberty for all God's creatures, who have never wandered after strange gods or betrayed their trust, who stand faithful sentinels upon the watchtower, who have ever given of their time, their means, and the best efforts of their intellect to promote the success of their party and secure its triumph, under whatever standard-bearer, if that be the Ring, then I say also, with equal emphasis, up with the ring and down with the traitors.

Let that Ring include in its ample circumference all that is good, loyal, and true, all that the party holds of faith, honor, and unfaitering allegiance. This Ring, Mr. President, is the Republican party, strong in its devotion, determined and resolute of heart, and presenting an unbroken front to open with the traitors. enemics and bolting conventions. Then, sir, from that Ring, as ever, will proceed no uncertain sound, no envious grumblings, no clamor of disappointed ambition or petty malice, but the clear ring of loyal, hearty, active effort—the sure forerunner of victory, So much for the Ring.

Ex-Senator Frelinghuyson's Speech. The Hon. Frederick T. Fredinghuysen, ex-United States Senator, also delivered an eloquent address, in the course of which he thus referred to the administration and the President :-Another reason for the successful issue of this election is that I want to see the party firmly supporting our illustrious President. Now I know there are some lean souls in this world, and they are very lean indeed, who look without commendation on the President. They look upon the personal attentions which every man in the country ought to rejoice to render him, as a sinister craving after his patronage and it is represented in the Democratic papers in

During the war his patriotism animated his sound judgment, showed him the priceless value of this nation to us, to future generations, to the world and his iron will became steel and his courage became sublime, and the command was, March on March on! I believe it in the sight of heaven to be my duty, and I take the responsibility. (Applause, A few more patriot regiments enrolled in death their names among the martyrs of liberty, and that Rebe host was broken and destroyed, and he called on the Republicans thus:—There is a huge Rebel army which threatens the destruction of my country I will crush it and the country will be saved. Fearfi terribly fearful was the execution of that resolve. He saw the gallant you'd of this country, with the dew of life's morning on their brow, laid in ghastly lines at his feet, and the Robel host was unbroken, undismayed. That was the crisis of the war; that was mayed. That was the crisis of the war; that was the crisis of the civil liberty of the world; it was whether the sublime proclamation of Abraham Lincoln was to bring honor or reproach upon mankind. Then, then, he was great! Any other man would have hesitated, would have fattered, would have said, I dare not make a greater sacrifice, in the sight of heaven I dare not; let the army recede.

Mr. Frelinghuysen spoke in a most eloquent strain for about three-quarters of an hour. THE NEW IYORK MONEY MARKET. The following extracts show the state of the New York money market yesterday:-From the Herald.

The marked change in the aspect of affairs to day was the general subject of discussion and congratulation. That the worst is passed is fervently hoped by the great majority; but there are many who yet shake their heads, and prophesy further danger. The re-opening of the Gold Exchange seemed to be the turning point, and matters have rapidly mended eversince. The Panic so far has been in stocks. Its demoralization has not extended beyond Wall street. Business was at a stand-still among the exporting merchants for a few days, antil something near a definite quotation for gold could be had. But, as will be seen by our reports elsewhere, the dry goods market is fairly active and buoyant. In the gloom which prevailed gesterday a repetition of 1957 was looked for this winter. The panic which has just visited us was, more properly, like that of 1864, when was confined to stocks. So far this present crisis has not gone beyond the speculative elements of Wall street. The failures are of stock houses only. Even Lockwood & Co., bankers as they were originally, owe their fate to an excessive venture in the stock market. The crash, great as it has been, has involved no strictly commercial house, and will impair none except where the members were tired of the slow profits of legitimate trade, and had sought to busten their affluences by operations in Wall street. No move failures of any kind are reported to day, the dead-look in the Gold Bank and inability to make clearanses throwing a veil over the real standing of many firms connected with last Friday's doings, innocently or otherwise, and keeping them still affoat. The ill-fortune which has lately presided over the destinites of Wall street seems to be appeased with the immolation of Lockwood & Co. As to the relation of the liabilities and assets of this firm nothing was made public to-day. The office is still in charge of the assignee, who transacted whatever business required attention. U. S. STEAMER JUNIATA. LISBON, Portugal, Sept. 0, 1869.—Hop. G. M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy.—Sir:—I have the honor to inform you that after a fair run of twenty-one days from New York we made the light on Cape Roca, the rock of Lisuou and next morning entered the Tagus with light airs, and anchored off the city at 2 P. M. I found here the Sabiae, Commander J. G. Walker, the Richmond having sailed three days before our arrival, and the Guara but one day previous. I am happy to be able to inform the Department that, considered as a sailing vessei, the Juniata is a success, and that she has falsified every unfavorable prediction made of her. She is an excellent sea boat, steers well, is stearly and easy in her motion, lays-to well, would send with safety, and stands well up to her canvas, Very respectfully, your obedient servant, S. S. Luce, Commanding.
